Amateur Comedy Club Has Final

'The Rose,' 'Why Not' and 'The Unnecessary Atom' Played Delightfully.

ast night in their club house at 150 East called their "last dramatic gasp" this season. It was a hearty gasp in three nusic and a supper at which the members toasted in substantial liquids their uture in a new ten story club house. The first play was Mrs. Fiske's tragedy of old New Orleans called "The Rose." In it Mr. Oswald C. Hering. resident of the club, appeared for the first time as a club player and gave the members a delightful surprise by the fine dramatic insight he displayed in the difficult part of an elderly man who sacrifices his life so that his young wife may find her real love in his young attending physician. Miss Dorothy Clapp played the wife with charm, and Mr. Armory Haskell was the lover physician. The cast was completed by Mr. Drelin-ourt Martin and Miss Grace Hendricks. The second offering was a tragic sketch by John Jex, called "The Unecessary Atom," with Mrs. S. Hinman Bird and Mr. Harold W. Gould, amateur players who measure up to the highest professional standards, in the leading parts. Mr. Kenneth M. Murchlson fur-nished capably the third side of the domestic triangle portrayed. In this play Miss Barbara Sabin had a juvenile part.

"Why Not," a rollicking farce by Mr.
Van H. Cartmell, Jr., a member of the club, had its first hearing as the last of the trio of plays. The author had a part in his play and was capably sup-ported by Mrs. Theodore E. Steinway, Miss Lois Embree and Mr. William R. Florence Ferrell revealed a beautiful soprano voice in a group of four songs.
